Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: . . . NOTES AND COMMENT (Heavy numerals refer to lines.) THE LONG AND VARIED (PINDARIC) ODE The long ode with varied stanza is sometimes known as the Pindaric Ode, because it originated in the imitation of the odes of the Greek poet, Pindar. Pindar was an Athenian poet who lived in the fifth century before Christ--the most glorious period of Greek art. The supreme excellence of his work has often caused his name to be loosely applied to a whole class of poems, of which other examples besides his have come down to us. These are the festival songs or hymns sung by trained choruses (who at the same time danced to the rhythm of the music) on great civic or religious occasions, such as the Olympic or Pythian games, or the annual spring festival at Athens in honor of the god Dionysus. The poet whose ode was chosen for the occasion was often publicly honored and rewarded; the dancing chorus was sometimes trained, at the expense of the state, by an official chosen for the purpose; the subject of the song was usually the praise of the local deities, and the dance which accompanied the singing moved before or about one of their altars. In fact, this beautiful performance was not regarded as a form of entertainment, but as a solemn rite or ceremony, in which the three arts of music, poetry, and dancing united their different languages in one rhythm, with the object...
