Not illustrated. 1855 Excerpt: .limber, is carried to the barn in carts or wagons, hung from six to ten plants on a stick, and stowed away for ftring. It is also of great importance to be particular in the arrangement of the sticks. The equal and general circulation of heat throughout the house depends on the manner in which this is done. My barns commonly have three firing tiers above, and three below, the joists. I commence arranging the sticks on the most elevated tier in the roof, to which I give five inches distance; and on each tier, as I descend, I gain one inch, so that on the lowest tier, nearest the fire, the sticks are placed eleven inches apart. This disposition of the sticks, I have ascertained by late experiment, is important. The sticks of tobacco being wider apart next to the fires, gives a freer circulation, and, consequently, a more equal temperature, than the usual way of equal distance from bottom to top. The heat having more space to ascend, must be more equal and generally diffused, and will give a more uniform house of tobacco I esteem this a considerable improvement; and if one has house room, and makes a greater difference in the proportionate distance between the sticks, it will be a still better arrangement. Process of Curing.--I commence warming, or preparing the fires, the day after housing. I prefer what is commonly called the bedlogs of green, and the feeding of dry or...
