(26) The median cannot be readily determined from a simple frequency graph, on which, if the graph is smoothed, the median bisects the area. However, on a smoothed cumulative frequency graph, the median can be quite easily approximated by drawing a horizontal line at a point which bisects the ordinate which represents the total frequency. Then drop a perpendicular line from the point on the graph cut by this horizontal line, to the horizontal axis and read the magnitude indicated at the foot of this perpendicular. In Chart 7, based on Table XVII, we have an illustration of the interpolation method. For the sake of the comparison two curves have been drawn on this chart, but only the less than curve, that is, the curve based on the column in Table XVII giving the frequencies in class or below, is used in the interpolation, (27) To approximate the median, a horizontal line is drawn from 27.5 on the vertical axis (bisecting the range 0-55). From the point where this interpolation line cuts the less than curve a perpendicular is dropped to the base line and the value at its foot, 47.0 is taken as the estimated median for the universe from which this sample is taken. The quartiles and other similar partition measures, such as the deciles and percentiles, can be located by the same method. Thus the first or lower quartile is the item which divides the series into two groups, one-fourth smaller...
